Abstract

Men of Honor is a biographical film released by the 20th Century Fox Film Company of the United States. This film was directed by George Tillman Jr., and the film co-stars embraces Robert De Niro Cuba Gooding Jr, and Charlize Theron. The film illustrates the story of the struggle of Carl Brahill, the first black deep-sea diver in the history of the United States Navy. This paper will analyze in detail the impact of Carl Brahill's tenacity and struggle spirit on college students according to the performance status and personality characteristics of contemporary college students in the university. Contemporary college students emancipate their minds, face everything with a realistic attitude without reservation, feel everything, and thus collide with ideological sparks, forming their own values. It is necessary to objectively analyze the current situation and characteristics of contemporary college students' values in order to find ways and countermeasures to help them establish positive values.

1. Brief introduction

1.1 The circumstantial introduction of Men of Honor

Carl had enjoyed swimming in the rivers of my hometown since he was young and had developed excellent swimming skills. He spent almost two years lobbying and actively striving for the opportunity to participate in the Navy diving training program. The instructor who he met was no other than Sandy, who had been removed as the chief sergeant and transferred to coach. He completed the twelve steps to symbolize honor and overcome discrimination with hard perseverance and became the first African-American diving captain of the United States Navy.

1.2 Contemporary College Students Management

1.2.1 The pluralistic characteristics of college students had their own characteristics

First of all, their group structure tends to be diversified. Lee, S. and Kim, H. (2020). The quality differences of college students are far from each other, embracing differences in intelligence level, knowledge base, ability level, and personality characteristics. In addition, the nature of students and regional differences make the group structure of college students more diversified.

The second characteristic is the diversity of group value orientation. The multiple values make college students have multiple criteria for evaluating their life values: some are based on the level of dedication to society and creativity, some are based on the level of social status and power, and some are based on self-improvement and self-realization (Perry, T. D., 2019).

The third characteristic is the diversity of group behavior. The different qualities and value orientations of college students make them behave in a diversified way. From the perspective of learning attitude, it can be divided into active learning type and passive learning type (Morrison, T., 2019).

Secondly, the openness characteristics of college students. Under the influence of quality education in primary and secondary schools, contemporary young college students have received better personalized education compared to their parents who received traditional education; Quality education also enables them to have a wider range of knowledge, and the development of social technology has provided them with more ways to learn. College students receive information from various sources, and they have a wide range of knowledge and broad perspectives. These have prompted college students to develop a more open personality. Rich in self-awareness, full of confidence, and some even quite bold. Having a wide range of interests and hobbies, and being able to develop them into strengths (Smith, J., & Johnson, A., 2019).

1.2.2 Practical orientation in value orientation

With the continuous deepening of reform and opening up and the gradual improvement of the socialist market economy system, the value orientation of college students has undergone profound changes. They pay more attention to reality, such as practicality and immediate interests, that is, they disdain "empty promises" and formalism, and care about tangible benefits (Chen, L. & Wang, H., 2020).

1.2.3 Practical tendencies in learning and research

After the implementation of the unified fee system in universities, there has been a significant change in the attitude of college students towards higher education. They pay more attention to the relationship between learning and employment and focus on the return on investment. They have their own requirements for the quality of education, and high investment with low returns or relatively low returns of equivalent investment can cause dissatisfaction among students (Brown, K., & Garcia, M., 2019).

The confusion is brought about by the conflict between ideals and reality. Some college students idealize college before entering and are full of ambition. However, after entering college, they realize that many students around them are addicted to the internet, personal relationships with their children, or meaningless negative decadence. They inadvertently develop a herd mentality and lose themselves. College graduates face the challenge of oversupply, and even "good students" may not necessarily find their desired jobs. The once-secure employment situation for college students is gone forever. Therefore, finding a job and dedicating oneself to learning can sometimes be difficult to achieve the best of both worlds.

Many college students are “led by the nose to study” before entering university. After entering university, they find it difficult to adapt to “unregulated” university life, such as not being able to manage their time, sleeping and playing games without class hours, feeling like they are wasted in college, and not knowing what to learn or read.

When it comes to problems, bring the “family style” to schools and society. If you encounter difficulties, you will adopt self-abusive behavior, which will be stopped by your parents at home. They do not know that in society and at home, it is different. In short, valuing personal interests and personal feelings, but lack global awareness and team spirit.

2. The present situation and personality characteristics of contemporary college students in universities

2.1 Classroom circumstances

College students sometimes sleep and play with mobile phones in class. They can’t effectively concentrate on the class and do something irrelevant to the class. The teacher’s hard explanation in each class is actually a kind of labor achievement. Let me ask a person who doesn’t know how to respect the achievements of others’ work? If students cannot clearly recognize this point, they should first trace back to the most basic problem of being a person and the problem of students’ civilization and politeness. Yang, Y. and Wang, Q. (2021). We should make every student clearly realize that respecting the work of others is also a kind of respect and recognition for themselves.

2.2 Students lack learning interest and motivation

We are supposed to clearly realize that the most fundamental reason why students do not like learning and are unwilling to learn is that before entering university, students are all chosen by their parents according to their current social employment situation or personal views, and their personal interests and hobbies are not fully taken into account. This kind of fixed choice or the path paved by the development space defined by their parents makes students mistakenly think that they do not need their own efforts as long as they can successfully obtain the diploma. There is a place to work, so they have no ambitious goals, and can't make reasonable career plans according to their own characteristics or hobbies, which is commonly known as "gnawing old people" (Kim, E. & Park, S., 2020). In addition, some classroom teachers are merely passive, boring, and single preaching, which can not extraordinarily effectively attract students and mobilize students' enthusiasm for active learning.

2.3 Students are not prone to effectively and reasonably arrange and make full use of their study time

After three years of hard study in high school, every student is full of longing for his own university. He has just entered the university campus and is curious about everything here. He thinks that he is supposed to relax and enjoy life after entering the university. He cannot closely connect the rich resources in the university with his spare time. He can reasonably make a study plan. He can not give full play to his initiative and initiative in learning. He has poor self-care ability and self-control ability. Students can't make a reasonable learning plan according to the courses they have learned, which causes great psychological pressure in front of heavy professional courses, and ultimately leads to low learning efficiency and poor quality.

2.4 Without good learning approaches, learning efficiency is naturally not consummate

University is a place for students to learn new knowledge. Teachers should teach scientific learning approaches and develop good learning habits in combination with their own courses and professional settings. Because high school students have developed exam-oriented education in order to enter school, poor learning methods will solely cause great psychological pressure on students, and low learning efficiency will lead to a vicious circle. We need to encourage students to participate in various community activities, relax their brains, and increase their knowledge so that their bodies and minds are prone to grow happily, which is also conducive to the improvement of learning efficiency (Wang, J. & Liu, S., 2019).

2.5 Summary of the current situation of contemporary college students at university

Contemporary college students are the young people of our century who grew up with the reform and opening up. They are rarely affected by the single and legendary values of the past. They emancipate their minds, face everything with a realistic attitude without reservation, feel everything, and thus collide with ideological sparks, forming their own values. The various values spontaneously formed by young people can be divided into true and false, and between right and wrong. In order to "eliminate the false and retain the true" and guide the healthy growth of young people with scientific value trends and value goals, it is necessary to objectively analyze the current situation and characteristics of contemporary college students' values in order to find ways and countermeasures to help them establish positive values.

3. The Negro's liberalism and struggle spirit in Men of Honor

3.1 Brief Introduction to Liberalism

As we all know, liberalism plays an important role in our daily life. Therefore, it is necessary for individuals to understand deeply. I will show the meaning of liberalism. Then, I will display my opposition to racism. Because of it, there exits someone who have the strong desire to own liberation.

3.1.1 The Meaning of Liberalism

The essence of the so-called liberalism lies in the view and outlook on life that advocates the individual's free development and free expression. Collins, P. H. (2019). The term freedom has a long history. In modern times, especially in the industrial age, most democracies have extended the right to vote. For the individual, the will of the individual is expressed, the right of the individual is not driven by external forces, and the values and interests of the society are not set aside. Such a spirit is a high-level expression of human rights as a result of the spread of the independent spirit. At the same time, Liberalism is a revolution. And in this campaign, the modern capitalist social system was established.

3.1.2 American Social Backgrounds

At the time of the founding of the United States, it was in the "Rational Era" of the 18th century. The founding members are deeply influenced by British Liberalism. It is John Locke's natural rights and Rousseau's social contract theory. The Declaration of Independence and the War of Independence is simply a strong sense of freedom and sense of rights. As for the first modern revolution against colonialism, the American Revolution is a well-deserved revolution. The United States, which later consisted of these independent states, similarly became the basic principle of establishing a nation.

3.1.3 The Liberalism of Afro-Americans

Afro-Americans are one of the earliest groups in North America. They made an indelible contribution to the development of the United States of America (Gates, H. L. (Ed.), 2019). Paradoxically, more than two hundred years of slavery and more than a hundred years of racial segregation have caused them to abuse themselves on this land where they have created innumerable wealth. Afro-Americans have long been fighting for their freedom and equality. Embark on the beginning of the new continent. From smashing slave chains, getting out of slavery and overthrowing the wall of apartheid, and fighting for various political rights.

They believe that blacks must combat racist oppression through violence and win national dignity and launch many vicious actions. Thereby announcing the end of apartheid in the United States. Countless state governments also adopted tough measures in different forms to promote the development of the civil rights movement. (Turner, R. & Johnson, B., 2021).

3.2 The Negro's struggle spirit in Men of Honor

As a matter of fact, how can a person who wants to save others be disabled? From any logical point of view, this is unreasonable. No one wants a disabled person to save him when facing death. But what he wants to do is the chief diving officer. He shows the extraordinary consummate. Finally, he resumed his post after breaking his leg, simultaneously, he achieved his goal of becoming the chief diving officer of the Navy.

The power of faith and struggle spirit is great. It supports people's lives, urges people to struggle, and promotes people's progress. It is precisely that it has created one miracle after another in the world. Thereby, the power of faith and struggle spirit is the source of life. With its help, what can we compete with it on the way to life?

Thinking about the college students' stagnation due to a little obstruction in their daily study, complaining about this and that, finding various reasons and excuses to excuse themselves. Now I feel ashamed to think about it. Carl is susceptible to adhering to his ideals and never gives up in such an extremely unfair environment. We often complain about the unfairness of heaven and always feel that life is difficult.

4. Conclusion

Extending to our environment, we need to face the cruelty of social facts. The ruthless world has brought us both hardship and hardship. What it brings us is hardship, which is also the cornerstone of success. Whether we accept it or resist it, what we need to face is our own life and our own road. In the vast sea, we saw the passion that was not precipitated and the hard pursuit of the brave black people. We are not lacking in faith and spirit of struggle (Zhang, Q. & Li, Y., 2021). We just chose to be comfortable and avoid the wind and waves. Faith is also very important to us. We are prone to do better and be more successful.

In addition, we are prone to understand the importance of liberalism and the struggle spirit for everyone. Especially for the poor. As a matter of fact, not merely the rich but also the poor exceedingly need liberalism and struggle spirit. We are supposed to know the characteristics of liberalism and the differences in liberalism described in the past so that they have susceptibility to have a deeper revelation and understanding of liberalism.

Overall, we are supposed to enlighten the importance of liberalism for everyone so that to make contributions to equality in modern society. In order to let everyone have their own freedom and have the susceptibility to do anything which they want and are prone to be jubilant because of their freedom and struggle spirit (Garcia, A. & Perez, L., 2019).

From my perspective, the dream is consummate, and reality is cruel. When the dream shines into reality, everything is extremely worthwhile. Therefore, our college students are supposed to realize that they should not live the comfortably studying and play in their own college. On the contrary, they are prone to make complete use of the struggle spirit in their daily studying to obtain a glorious and consummate future.
